Hello folks, we wonder if there is any flapper in the world who knows how to wash the dishes after a meal.

FATAL BLOW

He was a man of pleasant ways
And doddly compeany
Until one fatal day he drove
A golf ball off the toe.
He made a hole in it, and ah,
How different he be!

Don't give up the ship, cried the passenger as his sea-sick friend leaned over the rail.

(If you know where there are any us to it. We thought the custom of patting the dough-dough had become as extinct as the dodo).

FIRE RAGES IN OAKLAND

$40,000 BLAZE IN GILCHRIST STORE FINALLY IS CONTROLLED

OAKLAND, July 5.—Fire which menaced the principal business district of Oakland within a block of the city hall broke out at 7 o'clock tonight in the Gilchrist Furniture Company's three-story building at Thirteenth and Clay streets.

Three alarms summoned a large portion of the Oakland fire department to the scene.

Fifteen minutes after the first alarm was sounded the building was a mass of flames and three firemen were overcome by smoke and heat and carried out of the structure unconscious.

They were rushed to the Oakland Emergency Hospital for treatment. The first and second floors were quickly gutted.

The fire department finally got control of the flames and prevented it spreading to adjoining buildings.

Doble Steam Car Exhibition Here Is Drawing Crowds

The marvelous simplicity of the Doble Steam automobile, which is claimed to be the greatest automotive mechanism ever made, was explained to interested people who thronged the showrooms of the company at 1206 Macdonald avenue all yesterday afternoon and evening.

That the car has but 36 moving parts is one of the points about the car given great emphasis. In contrast with this, internal combustion automobiles have from 400 to several thousand moving parts.

Prices of the machine are to be from $500 to $8000, and the highest priced Doble Steam Car at $8000 is to compete with the only two gasoline machines with hand-fitted parts, the Rolls Royce and the Sunbeam, at prices around $15,000, according to the statements of the representatives of the company.

The $500 machine is claimed to compete in quality with any $750 internal combustion engine automobile.

Kozy Kove Raided After Officers Purchase Liquor

Kozy Kove, a resort at the Point, was raided by plain clothes men employed by Chief of Police Woods and Fred Crow, the proprietor, was arrested. The liquor that he sold to the detectives was poured in bottles, and this evidence with Crow was taken to the police station.

The bottles were placed on the desk and while there, Crow grabbed them, the police state, and dashed them against the wall, breaking them into a thousand pieces.

Minnie Hollister, a soiled dove, was also arrested at the same time and charged with vagrancy. She put up bail, and afterwards forfeited it.

Crow, in the police court entered a plea of not guilty and the date of his trial was set for July 17th.

Crow paid a fine in the federal court in San Francisco in May 1922, for a violation of the Volstead act.

JAPANESE WILL MAKE ATTEMPT TO NULLIFY NEW ALIEN LAND LAW

SACRAMENTO (Cal.), July 5.—The Japanese have formed definite plans for continued occupancy of California agricultural lands in violation of the Woodbridge "cropping contract" act, passed by the last legislature and the details of their program are now being carried among the Nipponese colonies of the State "by word of mouth."

The plot of evasion of the new anti-alien land measure was formulated at a secret conference in this city on June 30, it is announced in the columns of "Shin Sekai," Japanese language publication widely circulated among California Orientals.

Methods for "continued" operation of California farms, the newspaper declares which was sponsored by Chief Secretary Takimoto and Agricultural Expert Matsuoka, of the Sacramento Valley Japanese Association.

The plan definitely anticipates Nipponese cultivation of lands now under lease after August 15, the date on which the Woodbridge bill becomes effective.

Commenting on the meeting the Japanese publication says: Measures of relief were thoroughly discussed, but we cannot publish what was said. Those present will report to all the farmers by word of mouth at the various local Japanese associations.

Nearly 200 Cases Of Bootlegging Handled by Police

MONSTER CROWD PARTICIPATE IN CELEBRATION OF FOURTH OF JULY

With more than 30,000 people present, among them many visitors from various parts of the county and state, Richmond celebrated the Fourth with the biggest fiesta in its history. The parade, the first big event of the day, swept up Macdonald avenue at 10 o'clock in gala array, one of the most beautiful sights ever seen here.

The climax of the big affair came with the marriage of Miss Ethel Blount, the goddess of liberty, and Gavin Wilson, in the presence of nearly 800 people in Winters hall before the grand ball. Mrs. Florence Rundquist, maid of honor of the goddess, was bridesmaid, and Hall Sanders, who managed the goddess contest, was best man. The ceremony was performed by Superior Judge Henry Alvarado, immediately following which the couple left on their honeymoon, the destination of which was kept secret.

Patriotic exercises were held at the band stand immediately after the parade, at which Senator King was the speaker. Mayor E. J. Garrard delivered the address of welcome, and the Declaration of Independence was recited by Edith Tesse.

Santa Rosa Canton, I. O. O. F., was awarded first prize in the competitive drill held during the afternoon, and Richmond Modern Woodmen of America second prize. Various Odd Fellow teams and the Modern Woodmen took part in the drill.

The various concessions and dances proved to be popular attractions, and were patronized by huge throngs.

Modesto Deputy Resigns Office In Salary Row

MODESTO, July 5.—Charging that he has been denied the salary of $175 a month which goes with the office, according to county government acts in force in counties of this class, T. F. Kiernan, former deputy United States marshal, resigned as chief deputy under Sheriff Grant Hogan today. The salary, contrary to the system in vogue in other counties, has been going to Undersheriff Wright, clerical man in the office. Kiernan claims Hogan violated a pre-election agreement that he was to get the top salary in the office. Kiernan managed Hogan's campaign last year.

Interesting and profitable talks by R. F. Urquhart, Emmett Smyth, L. J. Thomas, John Wood, Frank Scholes and J. P. Strom featured a lively meeting of the Richmond Auto Dealers club yesterday at Martins Grill. The meeting was presided over by John Wood, who was elected president of the club at the last meeting.

In the talks, points of interest to the dealers were brought up and mutual benefit was derived from the exchange of ideas. Plans are being made by the club to make itself felt in the civic and social activities of the city, and much of its time and energy is to be devoted to this end.

AUTO OVERTURNS AND PITTSBURG MAN RECEIVES FATAL INJURIES

Mike Pich of Pittsburgh, and an employee of the General Chemical Company at Nichols, died at the county hospital at Martinez two hours after he had been fatally crushed in an automobile accident on the highways near the Ambrose school house, while he and J. Ortega also of Pittsburgh were on their way home from work.

Pich was pinned under the overturned automobile, the weight of the car crushing his skull and his body. Ortega was seriously though not fatally hurt. The two men were rushed to Pittsburgh where they received first aid treatment, and afterward Pich was removed to the hospital here where he died two hours after the accident.

The men were riding in Ortega's automobile, on their way home from work, when the accident occurred. At a point near the Ambrose school, Ortega attempted to pass a motorcycle while going at a good rate of speed, and in making the attempt to pass his machine swerved off the road and turned over three times before it came to a stop in the ditch at the side of the highway bottom side up, pinning Pich underneath. It is thought Ortega lost control of the machine when it swerved off the road.

Wrexham smiled sardonically. "Not me! You can run your own blessed show. And I don't want to mix with your friend Macarty; don't like his looks. I've got enough enemies now, without taking on more."

Macarty went insolently to the lounge of old Philbrick. He seemed to bristle against some offer which tempted him, yet which he was resolved to reject. Philbrick sighed, and rose.

"Come along to the library. Uncle Neb! Bring out coffee and cigars." The old clerk followed them with the thick creole coffee and a box of cigars into the library. Here a smoldering fire in the great fireplace banished the damp chill of evening. The two men settled into deep chairs.

"Confounded pretty face!" said Wrexham. He was staring at an enlarged photograph which stood on the mantel. "Most amazing face, that!"

Philbrick merely grunted. He seldom betrayed in words the poetic urge that was in him. Sometimes it came forth in deeds, but he shrank from talking of it. Not for worlds would he have it generally known that he wrote verse. It was in him, however, and it came forth in more ways than one—sometimes very surprisingly.

"Aline is a wonder-girl," he said. "Looks exactly like her mother, too." Had Wrexham rightly understood this remark, it would have altered his entire life. But he failed to heed it. He was staring at the picture on the mantel.

The aroma of the parched coffee and good tobacco mingled pleasantly in the room. It was a large room, paneled like the others, and not confined to books, jewels, both artistic and intrinsic, hung upon the walls. Through a hundred years and more the men of this family had brought their spoils home to this room, spoils of diplomacy and work and battle.

A case of jeweled orders; presentation words incrustated with gold and gems; four ancient oils worth their weight in hundred-dollar bills. A woman's picture—Aline's grandmother—set in a frame of ivory, studded with huge, rough sapphires; and so on, in an infinitude of detail. Wrexham glanced about the walls, a predatory glitter in his eyes.

"Wonder your niggers don't walk off with some of this truck!" he observed. Philbrick grunted again. "Nonsense! They're family darkies."

"And no wonder your friends the Macartys want to loot this house!" Wrexham's eyes narrowed. "Anybody'd want to. I'd want to myself! Might come and do it some night."

"You?" Philbrick smiled in his gray beard. "You're not that sort." Wrexham suddenly flung a snarl at him.

"Don't know me, Bah! You fools who live and rot and die here under the hand of the law! You don't know what goes on in the world! I tell you there's no crime worth the name that I haven't."

He checked himself with an oath. "Too much liquor!" he went on gruffly. "If I could carry it like you, now! Well, it's a rum go."

"So you've pirated in your time?" said Philbrick softly. "Like they do in books?"

Wrexham leaned back in his chair and vented a burst of hearty laughter. "You are a boy, aren't you?" he said amusedly. "I believe on my soul you just wait and scheme to get me talking about pirates and murders on the high seas, and so forth."

"Well, I like it," admitted Philbrick sheepishly. A wistful note crept into his voice. "I've always wanted to go to sea, and never had the chance."

"With all the sea at your door?" scoffed Wrexham.

"Yes, and I've liked to. It with here—you may need it. Good night!" Philbrick turned to the door, and his great figure vanished. Uncle Neb followed him, and the door slammed.

Wrexham was left alone in the room, a picture of blank astonishment, staring after them. Presently he recollected the telegram in his hand, and glanced at it. He seemed to waken from his daze with a start.

"The devil!" he cried out protestingly. Then he realized there was none to hear his protest.

"Why, the old scoundrel! He's a slick and no mistake. Worked me, he did—worked me like a blasted fool!" A note of admiration crept into his voice. "I'll be d—d! If the old rascal didn't go away and leave me in charge—me, mind you!"

He stood gazing around the dim room as though unable to comprehend it. Trusting the telegram into his pocket, he went to the center table. There he took a cigar from the open box, lit off the end, and returned to the desk. He dropped into the chair before it, and held the candle to his cigar. Then he leaned back and surveyed the room again. A struggle was in his face.

"This is a rum go, a rum go!" he exclaimed roughly. "Fancy this, now! What old Hvarson says to this, ah! What ud any one say who knew me?"

Presently he rose again and went back to the fireplace. He stood there, his feet planted wide apart, and stared hard at the enlarged photograph of the girl on the mantel. It gazed down at him from wide gray eyes, crystalline clear. The struggle deepened in his face. His brows drew down as he looked at the picture.

"I wonder if that old rascal realized a few things?" he cogitated aloud. "D—n him, I believe he did! Told him too much about myself, that's what I did. Well, young lady, your property is in the hands of a cursed bad rascal, and that's the truth! Nothing to say about it, have you? But it's a d—d mess—confound it, don't look at me that way! I didn't mean to swear in front of you!"

"Now, ma'am, do you suppose that if I was to stick on this here job, that little matter back in the coral sea would be forgiven me? Do you, ma'am?"

He stood motionless, his head slightly cocked, staring up at the picture. Suddenly, as though some inner answer had come to him, his lips parted in a wide smile. Through his beard flashed strong, even teeth like white ivory.

"Well, Miss Aline, it's a bargain!" he cried out exultantly. "Darned if ever I thought I'd look into eyes on earth like yours! Eyes of an angel, that's what. I'm a rotten fool and no mistake—but I'll do it. I expect it'll come to no good end, neither. If this isn't a bad crowd we're up against, I don't know one! But it'll be a novelty to be fightin' for something decent, won't it?"

He laughed again, and bowed to the photograph. "I'll do it, ma'am, and thank you for the chance!"

CHAPTER VIII

Captain Wrexham, having made his decision, displayed no further hesitation. He turned from the fireplace, walked over to the case of decorations, and planted himself before it.

"Ah!" he observed, blowing a cloud of smoke. "It's only fair to have a look at what I'm in charge of, eh?"

He swung back the case from the wall, held a candle closer, and inspected the wall safe. A chuckle broke from him. White teeth flashed through his beard.

"The old rascal left her in charge of me, but thoughtfully forgot to tell me the combination! Well, if that safe isn't thirty years old, I'm a Kanaka."

Still chuckling, he leaned forward and touched the knob. For a little while he stood thus, only his fingers moving deftly. Then he straightened up, nodding as though well pleased with himself. The safe door swung open to his hand.

Decidedly, this was not Captain Wrexham's first encounter with a safe!

The scene which followed flung a singular light upon the ethical impulse of this wall cast up by the sea. Another man would have been in thought of the coming officers, and in nervous waiting, but not Wrexham! To Be Continued

GIRL SCOLDS HER FRIEND FOR APPARENT SLIGHT

"Alice, I surely am furious to you. You deliberately passed me by without speaking. I want to know the reason."

"Why—why—Louise, I didn't recognize you. Really, I didn't. You know I wouldn't dream of high-toning you. Besides, how could I and why would I?"

"I'm sure I don't know. We won't get angry about it, then, will we?"

"Well, I should hope not. Besides, how did you expect me to recognize you when you are wearing a perfectly gorgeous new suit and hat. Even new shoes and gloves, aren't they?"

"Oh, yes. The outfit is fairly new. Got it a week ago."

"Is that true? Well, yes, I think it is still new in that case. But goodness, where are you going and what's the idea? Are you going to be married or something?"

TAKING OUTING AT COAST

LEAVE FOR LOS GATOS

Mrs. W. W. McLarney, 1115 Nevins avenue, accompanied by her two daughters, Mrs. George Burrus and Mrs. T. M. Carlson, left yesterday for Los Gatos where they will spend a month's vacation.

"Not that I know of. But why all the fuss? Can't I get something new once in a lifetime. Goodness knows I needed some clothes. I was getting horribly shabby."

"Maybe so. But why spend a young fortune when you do buy. That suit must have cost fifty dollars if it cost a cent."

"Well, old dear, that's where you're on the wrong trail. It cost $39.50, exactly. I am pleased with it myself. Got it last week at Cherry's wonderful clearance sale. Hat, too. Really, you should go to 515 13th street at once and take advantage of this sale. You may open a charge account at Cherry's too. They also have a nice store for the men folks at 528 13th street."—Adv.

Hide-bound Humans

OF ALL hide-bound conventions that which dictates the use of hides is most binding.

In all history it appears that next to the skins of animals man has considered nothing more valuable than his own precious hide. He has sometimes even sacrificed the latter in an attempt to get the former.

For the supreme example of a human being's using an animal to cover his own nakedness there is Jonah, who used an entire whale. For the most noticeable example at present, and the most inconsiderable, there is the summer girl with her summer furs. Of course, furs are not entirely hides, but there would be no fur if there were not a hide from which it could grow.

Even in phrases of such common use that persons no longer pay attention to their exact meaning, this tendency of man to put over a "skin game" on the lower animals, is evident. One man will swear to "skin another alive," and perhaps the other will escape only "by the skin of his teeth." It was often with a leather whip made from cow-hide that the parent of the parental middle-ages gave his unruly son a "hiding."

History and Hides

The romance of the Hudson Bay Company and its desire for the pelts of animals was responsible for much of the early history of a large part of our continent. Colonial trappers, wearing clothes and hats of animal hide, spent their days in trying to trap more animals; just for their hides.

No matter in what field of history one searches it immediately appears that the expression to award some one a "leather medal" has more flattery in it than a scolding. There has been no truer friend to man than leather. Gold has been thrown about carelessly at times when leather has been treasured as above the value of rubies.

Perhaps Adam, perhaps Cain, first used the skins of animals. It may be that Eve, when the colder days of the winter season arrived, loined for a fur coat and Adam reluctantly killed an animal. It is an absolutely safe bet that Mrs. Cain had a fur coat if she wanted one; and perhaps she used a leather cradle for her offspring and a leather tent to live in. Egyptian monarchs have utilized leather tents, at any rate. Mrs. Cain may have protected her feet from the burning sands by the use of the first all-leather sandals.

Since Cain's Day

From Cain's day or shortly after—say 4,000 or 5,000 years after—there have been plentiful examples of man's dependence on leather in war and peace. There have been sandals, medieval leather stockings, modern shoes and boots; gloves, ancient and modern armor, wine bottles, Roman togas, Assyrian garments, ditch-diggers' breeches, emperors' embossed tapestries, and the driving belts in the factories of contemporary entrepreneurs.

Egyptologists have found bodies covered with leather hides, with the hair on, in the earliest graves. Passing over consideration of some specimens of leather work found in China and which dated back at least 3,000 years, it is interesting to notice the head-start some of the modern styles in foot-wear got among the noble Romans. By their time, the art of getting the hair off animal hides was well advanced, and the business of tanning even, was about as far along as it was destined to be until nearly the nineteenth century, when modern chemistry began to stir into life.

There is not a great deal of stylistic difference between the leather shoes of the ancient Romans and the play sandals of Willie Green, though the latter in the next block; though, of course, the former are harder to come across, except in the British Museum. Evidently the Roman believed in giving his toes plenty of fresh air. The uppers are cut into slits across the instep, and the rear of the shoe is simply a little work of cords. There were several styles of shoes even then, of course. One of them, the soccus, came half way to the knee.

Irish Ingenuity

The Irish, not to be very much outdone by the Romans, evolved as early as they, or earlier, a sort of modern shoe made from a circular piece of hide that was drawn up around the foot, laced behind and slit in front so it would not pecker. It was held together by leather thongs.

The medieval Englishman was on occasion almost entirely clad in leather.

Leather stockings were once worn, for example, by William Penn, and they and the leavings of today, writes an authority on dress, "may be a direct survival from the time when our ancestors, though still wearing skins, had learned to dress them."

Some Danish chieftains, who had been a long time dead, were found to have worn deer-skin cloaks, when their graves were dug up some years ago. The oak coffins in which they had been buried supplied enough tannin to preserve their cloaks, although the chiefs themselves had long since turned into their original elements.

The same authority who mentions these matters makes this interesting comment: "The use of furs has always survived to a greater or lesser extent, but it is interesting to note that motoring has caused a return to primitive dress as regards external garments. In order to withstand the air which is met when the car is in rapid movement, fur clothes and leather suits have been introduced, the latter of course, being not quite so old as the former.

The use of leather suits in aviation might have been mentioned had this student not written before the late war.

In the Factory

The now universal use of heavy leather for driving belts in factories may have connection, though remote, with the use it was put to in constructing windmills and other crude apparatus of old time. Its use in the automobile, has about the same relation to its use in the chariots of classic peoples, although in some of the latter it was used even as tires. Modern times probably have their unsung Gordian knots, similar to that of leather thongs which was tied by Gordius, a Phrygian, and which no one could untie until Alexander hit upon the happy expedient of cleaving it with his sword.

Even the Horse

From the most primitive to the most refined article of use and apparel that men have evolved, there has always been a certain hide-bound requirement for the highly convertible skin of the lesser creatures. Animal pelts have been found as necessary to human life as the animals themselves. Even the horse so long as he continues (as he gives every indication of doing) to grow a hide, will not be crowded out of the world by the automobile.

Leather has been used for tents and for book-bindings, for Assyrian battle helmets and modern football helmets, for boots and for college diplomas, for slingshots and for wrist watches. Whenever anything has seemed to displace leather, either new and unexpected uses have been found for it, or it has overthrown its competitors. Many materials, for instance, have been suggested for shoes, under the stress of war emergencies and whatnot. But none has succeeded in displacing for comfort, durability and universal use the leather which was first used by the Caveman or his early successors and last used by the American "dapper," 1922 model. Nothing takes the place of leather.

Mechanics Take Lead By Beating Refiners

HOW THEY STAND
W. L.	Pct.	Runs	Errors
Mechanics	7 3	.700
Refiners	6 4	.600
All Standards	4 6	.400
Barrel House	3 7	.300

Chief Clerk's Mechanics took the lead in the Twilight League race yesterday afternoon at the First street lot when they trimmed the Refiners, 4 to 2, in a hotly-contested game. The winners put the game on ice in the first inning when they chalked up four tallies, and managed to retain the lead in spite of several rallies by Garvin's outfit.

Cotthran's Absence Costly
The Refiners' stock took a decided slump by the absence of Lefty Cotthran, star southpaw, who is away on his vacation. The Mechanics may have edged over a victory even if Cotthran had been officiating, but it is our guess that the little left-hander would have subdued the Mechanics just as he used to do last season when he hurled the Barrel House to a pennant over the gang from the mechanical shops.

Fans Out For Blood
Frank Wolfram ran into trouble in the very first round and four runs were registered by the Mechanics before the side was retired. After that fatal inning Frank settled down and held the Mechanics to three hits and no runs.

Hal Dimmock held the Refiners safe until the sixth spasm when three hits and a walk netted two runs for the losers. Hal's performance on the mound was on the whole satisfactory, the southpaw striking out ten Refiners and keeping their hits well scattered along the way.

The large mob of fans on hand were out for blood and derived considerable satisfaction in riding any players whose work didn't happen to be up to snuff. Messrs. Elder and Ford were mighty lucky that they didn't have any close ones to judge yesterday or they would have received a merciless riding from the fans.

Game Won In First

The Mechanics stowed away the contest in their tool chest in the opening round when five hits and a walk produced four markers. Lamarra drew a pass to open the inning and advanced on Beeson's hit. Peppin fouled out to Roberts but Stange came through with a single. Daley followed with a double to the right center fence, sending Lamarra and Stange across the platter. Chamberlain scored Daley with a fluke two base hit to left field and in turn tallied on Murray's drive through short.

Refiners Score In Sixth

The Refiners did all of their heavy hitting in the sixth when they chased in two runs. Zimmerman started the rally with a single to center. Cullers fanned and Rubart fled out to Murray, but Bartram came through a single to right, sending Zimmerman to third. Dimmock momentarily lost his control at this stage and passed Wolfram. This brought up Red Johnson, who proceeded to drive a smashing single to right center, scoring Zimmerman and Bartram. With men on second and third, Chick Autry tried hard to get a hit and drive in the tying runs but the best he could do was make Chamberlain back up to the right field fence to take his long fly.

Sidelights of the Game

Although not wholly successful in venting their disagreeable dispositions by riding Skipper Roberts, the handful of abusive fans in the north end of the grand stand did succeed in getting a rise out of Johnny Garvin—a thing which they haven't been able to accomplish in two years.

Garvin was getting pretty sore over the way the fans were panning Roberts, who had a bad night and seemed to do everything wrong. Garvin was right, too, as Skipper did not deserve the riding that he was subjected to yesterday. As Garvin pointed out, Roberts has played Twilight League ball for the last five years and has always given the fans the best that he had in him. Skipper got the lash on the knickers yesterday, however, by controlling his temper and retaining his usual smile to the end.

Lefty Cotthran's absence undoubtedly lessened the chances of the Refiners in winning yesterday's contest. Cotthran has turned in shut-outs in his last two starts in the local circuit and was primed to give Hal Dimmock a great battle in their next mix-up.

Lefty Besson had a good day around the initial corner yesterday, coming up clean with several hard-hit drives and beating his man to the base each time.

Capacity Crowd Expected For Fights Tonight

With Mickey O'Donnell of Martinez and Joe Bell of Pittsburg heading the card, a capacity crowd is expected for the boxing matches to be staged this evening in the Point Richmond Opera House. Reports from the county seat, where O'Donnell is a big favorite, have it that over 200 fight bugs will come down to root for him, while a large crowd of Pittsburg fans are scheduled to accompany Bell.

Although the battle between O'Donnell and Bell promises to be the best on the program, a number of other good bouts will be reeled off. The mix betw. Lew Dennison, Denver lightweight, and Al Walker of Oakland promises to be full of excitement, while the other matches should be good.

The local fight game was revived with a bang in the initial show here two weeks ago, a large crowd being on hand and the card replete with exciting bouts. Quite a gathering of ladies were in attendance, and very thing was conducted in an orderly manner. Frankie Neff, former bantam-weight champion of the world will referee the fourth tonight.

The card follows:
Willie Burns vs. Jimmy Kelly.
Jack Davis of Oakland vs. Young Mike Gibbons of Oakland.
Johnny McFarland of Albany vs. Bert Seally of Martinez.
Charlie Sims of Albany vs. Kid Brooks of Richmond.
Lew Dennison of Denver vs. Al Walker of Oakland.
Mick O'Donnell of Martinez vs. Bell of Pittsburg.

COUPLE WILL LEAVE FOR THE EAST IN SHORT TIME

Mr. and Mrs. B. H. Thomas, (nee Irene Lucas) have just arrived from Davis, where Mr. Thomas has been instructing in the animal husbandry division of the College of Agriculture. They expect to spend a few weeks with their parents, Mr. and Mrs. Frank Lucas of Richmond and Mr. and Mrs. Charles Thomas of Oakland.

The last of this month the couple will travel east to the University of Wisconsin where Mr. Thomas has been awarded a years scholarship in animal breeding and nutrition. Their journey will include a trip to Alaska and Canada. They will spend some time in New York and Boston before Mr. Thomas returns to the animal husbandry department of the University of California where he expects to resume his instruction duties.

PICKED UP ON ROAD
IN DAZED CONDITION
Henry Kelmith, former sailor and later farm hand was picked up on the road near Walnut Creek, in a dazed condition and taken to the county hospital at Martinez. When he regained consciousness the following day, he was unable to tell what had happened to him the night before.

Death Of Stone Man After 25 Years Suffering

John H. Daley, for 25 years an inmate of the county hospital, died there early Wednesday morning. He was a native of Somersville, this county, and was aged 53 years.

John Daley was a member of General Winn Parlor, N. S. G. W., of Antioch. He was raised in this county and for seven years taught school at Judsonville. Twenty-five years ago while employed in the mines he was stricken with rheumatism and since that time has been confined to the hospital, with "orthritis deformans" gradually setting in. This means a growing together of the joints, in which they become generally deformed and ossified. During the recent years, though he retained an active mind, he has been unable to move himself, or any part of his body, though he could write if a pen or pencil were placed in his hands. He was a patient sufferer, however, and complained little of his conditions.

He was a brother of the late James J. Daley, Mrs. Minnie Rathmanner of Coalinga, Mrs. Annie Frank of Concord, Henry Daley and the late Charles Daley.

To Investigate Safety Operation Of Branch Road

Following the ending by the San Francisco-Sacramento Railroad of an application for authority to abandon that portion of its lines known as the "Danville Branch" and the receipt of informal complaints regarding the roads operation of the branch, the Railroad Commission, upon its own motion, ordered an investigation of the "practices, service, safety and operating conditions" upon the branch. A public hearing will be held at Danville before Commissioner Irving Martin at 10:30 A. M. July 19th.

Injuries Result In Death Of Sacramento Lady

Injuries received in an automobile accident on Sunday resulted here Wednesday night at the Cottage hospital, in the death of Mrs. Gertrude Clark Rose, wife of A. B. Clark, prominent Sacramento contractor. Mrs. Clark was riding with her husband near Pinole when their machine overturned after striking an embankment, and her back was broken. Heroic efforts by Dr. U. S. Abbott failed to save her life.

The remains were shipped yesterday to Sacramento, where the funeral will be held.

New Fatalities Emphasize Need Of 'Safety First'

The list of "Recent Fatalities in California" emphasizes the necessity of "Safety First" in industries. "Metal Mine Fires" shows conclusively that the prevention of such fires will save many lives. "Teaches Wife First Aid; She Saves His Life" is an example of spreading first aid instruction.

"A large knot in a Timber is the cause of Seriously Injuring a Foreman" deals with the selection of proper material for scaffolds. "The Days to Come" is an editorial on the reduction of the force in the Safety Department. "Safety Information for Young and Old" is full of interest.

"Saving Lives as an Economic Measure" by Will J. French, indicates some of the results obtained in accident prevention and the work yet to come. "Industrial First Aid Contest" is an announcement of the contest that will be held Labor Day September 3rd, at the State Fair in Sacramento. "Welding Gasoline Tank Causes Fatality" illustrates the care necessary in applying heat to vessels which have contained inflammable liquids.

The new address of the Industrial Accident Commission and California Safety News is State Building, Civic Center, San Francisco.
